Throughout this project, we gained experience working with real-world data. This project sets itself apart from school projects since it comes with plenty of design constraints and the need of approval throughout different sections of the project. We realized that when handling user input, it requires a lot more to take into account, especially with existing data in the database. The most important thing we learned was how to learn through research, trial, and error.